We have tracked, across all business programs, over 20,415 funding opportunities and $94.41B allocated funding to date Small business grants come to business owners from public and private sources. The federal government awards grants in a variety of categories for business owners. Small business grants do not provide funding towards starting new businesses, however. They focus on providing funding to a particular area of public interest. For example, a grant can go to a small business conducting research on a particular area of interest. However, that grant would not go towards the start up costs of getting that business off the ground. There are grant programs however to help some small business start-ups at the state and local levels. These often focus on developing businesses underrepresented in the area.
